

Margo Taylor was born in 1993 in Pasadena, California. She attended the Academy of Art University in San Francisco California, Cerritos College, and Art Center College of Design in Pasadena where she earned a BFA in Illustration. She switched her focus from portrait to abstract painting as a means of connecting her cultural roots with new forms of expression—specifically new iterations of non-objective art that critic Walter Robinson coined “Zombie Formalism.” Taylor uses line and color to explore the ideology of the human body, mind, and soul while addressing social issues ranging from African Diaspora to Faux-Feminism.
